This is an extension of one month and will be welcome news to farmers and ranchers.

The cold stormy March and late spring will necessitate the winter feeding of livestock considerably longer than usual, while many farmers have yet to secure their feed supply for spring seedling operations. The extension of free freight period should solve their difficulties.

Trotzky Would Put Labor Under Military Discipline

Moscow.—Militarization is the only means to fully utilize Russia's man power, said Leon Trotzky, Bolshevik minister of war, addressing the ninth convention of the Communist party here. His address was directed to defining the relation between the mobbing of the country and the industrial rehabilitation or Russia.

"Mobilization is more necessary now than it was formerly," he declared. "We have to deal with the present position of the working class, which cannot be utilized to the fullest extent by other means than military discipline. Trades unions are capable of organizing great masses of our workers, but so far as the present crisis cannot be met by them."

Trotzky declared the working army which is built on the principle of compulsory labor is no less productive than the old system of capitalist exploitation, and came out in favor of personal, rather than collective administration. He asserted political administration of railroads, was unsatisfactory, but the situation was such that it was necessary because railroad workers are more conservative in tendency than men engaged in other branches of labor.

Appeal for Funds To Help League

God Help Our Children If League Is Allowed to Wither and Die

London.—Earl Grey, Premier Lloyd George, Andrew Bonar Law, Sir John Simon, Lord North Clegg, and John R. Clynes published an appeal in the London Times for 1,000,000 pounds sterling, "to keep fresh in the minds of the people of the country the spirit and ideals which underlie the movement of the League of Nations."

The appeal points out what the League of Nations union has already done in the direction of peace. It says that a million dollars in loans sounds like a large sum but that if the British people do not support the League of Nations with all their might and resources, the League will still wither and die and if the League fails, God help our children, for no human agency can save them from calamities to which those of our late war will appear as the mere trifles."

Australia Delays Action

London.—The Daily Mail's Sydney correspondent says that the Commonwealth government is not taking action against the large naval force sent to the Imperial Conference. It adds that Canada's decision to not enlarge her navy has caused local anxiety regarding the care of the Pacific.

Canadian Cars In U. S.

Ottawa.—In the house of commons the minister of railways informed Joseph Archambault that 59,716 Canadian cars in the United States had belonged to the Canadian National Railway; 15,482 to the C.P.R.; 21,028 to the Grand Trunk-Railway and 12,366 to other Canadian railways.

West Demands Control of Our Natural Resources

Ottawa.—Development of Canada's natural resources and establishment of a more uniform system of exploitation of the government-owned railways in the house of commons. The first question, that of natural resources, was raised on a motion by Captain Marion, Fort William, and Rainy River, the second by Donald Sudell, members of the Conservative party. We demanded the opportunity again to urge transfer of western resources to the provincial governments. Dr. Cowan, Regina, argued that had the government been given time to adopt any particular method, but he strongly advised immediate action.

Major Redman, Calgary, favored scientific research in every possible way and advocated establishment of a commission to study the needs of the provincial governments action to develop them would have been taken long ago. The present situation was "impossible."

"I myself heard Sir Robert Bond declare that he would do all in his power to see that the resources were turned over to the provinces," Dr. Cowan declared further. He spoke of millions of feet of lumber

Says Sims Was Indiscreet

Rodman Criticizes Rear Admiral For Publishing Confidential Conversation

Washington.—Admiral the Pacific Fleet, told the Senate investigation committee today that Rear Admiral Sims letter to Secretary Daniels criticizing the "sinful part" in the war, was very indiscreet.

"Admiral Sims' indiscretions," he said, "very particularly in his breach of confidence in making public an intimate and confidential conversation, which should have been held secretly."

The witness referred to Sims' testimony that Admiral Benson, former chief of naval operations, told him prior to his departure for London, "not to let the British pull the wool over your eyes, we are German."

Admiral Rodman said the publication of that statement by Admiral Sims "had had some effects upon our cordial relations which were so close between us and one of our closest allies."

Indians Will Appeal To High Court

To Decide the Matter of the Rights And Status of Indians In Canada

Ottawa.—That the matter of deciding the rights and status of Indians in Canada will likely be taken to the highest court of the land. This was the statement made by A. C. Delisle, who described his standing as the mayor of Caughnawaga, and chief of the Caughnawaga Indians. Asked what the Caughnawaga Indians, now in Canada, will be taken to the highest court of the land, he said he did not know whether he was a subject of the present King of England, but he did know that he was a subject of the King of France.

"It's very cold, Mr. Ruggles," said she, "but I can't imagine what has been done." "I've been reading about Roxana and Miss Downing," said Ruggles, "and I'm curious about them. They have disappeared," said Miss Challand. "They are all in the music-room. But Ruth and Rosa were singing, and Roxana and Miss Downing were sitting together in a corner of the room when they presently got up and went out. I asked Ruth if she had seen them, and Miss Downing said that Roxana had consented to show her the Circassian dance, and that Ruth had agreed to do it before the others. I thought nothing of that, knowing Roxana is older than Ruth. I have just now gone out about half an hour ago and haven't come back. I've been all over the house, through the gardens, but can't find a sign of them."

Ruggles was conscious of a most disagreeable feeling in the pit of his stomach, and his mouth seemed suddenly to have gone dry. He had noticed that Ruth had been absent during dinner and had wondered if she were ill.

"Did you say anything to anybody?" he asked.

"No," Miss Challand answered, and glancing at Ruggles, added, "I suddenly pale. Why do you look that way? What do you think?"

"Oh, I'm sorry," said Ruggles with an effort to make his tone natural.

"It's just one of Roxana's foolish ideas."

"I don't like the Circassian dance. That may have just gone for a little while in me."

He hurried through the rear of the house and out into the back garden, which was long and narrow, and with a paved walk leading from the back door down the centre to a small iron door in the wall. This opened upon a little wood, where there were many pine woods, and at the distance of about a quarter of a mile up a broad path, the towers of the casino and skirted Paris Plaza, to come out upon the beach.

Ruggles reached the gate, and striking a match, stepped into the sand. It showed the fresh imprint of two feet, and then the sand closed over the prints. Also, the bolt of the gate, always fastened at night, had been slid back, so that the gate had passed this way, and Ruggles hurried along the path as far as his lame legs would carry him. The moon was nearly full, but its light was partly obscured by a thin, high cloud, which cut off the light channels. There was, however, difficulty in following the path, despite the fact that the sand was bright. Ruggles pushed on, rather expecting to come presently upon the two girls, who had probably been walking westward by a distant stream.

It was not a loud scream and it sounded like a sigh, as though a person emitting it might have discovered its cause to have been something to give no alarm. Ruggles stopped an instant to locate its direction, which seemed directly on his path, but could not find it. He had been shocked, and must have given some girl a moment's preoccupation with her heart, for he had seen a small bird or animal—a woodrat or cat or owl, or chough—specielessly flying over him, and his heart was unfeeling, unconscious, though he would have been unable to say what. But it seemed to him that he knew that Roxana should have left the grounds with Ruth, first, because she would know that Ruth would be strongly disapproved of by Miss Challand, Miss Elliot, and himself, and also because she had the light of the deserted gardens offered plenty of opportunity for such a performance.

The pieces grew thicker, shutting off the vague light, and as Ruggles groped his way along, he became more uneasy. He remembered his scene with Roxana in Paris, and her assuming that he was the man responsible for her hand as though he beat, she would never love any other man than himself. And he remembered the fact that Roxana's words had not warmed to Ruth, and that Ruth had been cold to him. Eliot had commented on her harsh distastefulness, and had advised him to let the two girls who were possibly disappointed with the prospect of marrying Van Hertzel.

Pretend Ruggles discovered that he could not be far from the main road, for he heard at no great distance the snorting of a high-powered motor car, and he knew that the motor had started, for there came a successive crash of gears as the driver reversed, or little opening in the pines, upon the carpet of glistening pine needles. As he did this, his eye was drawn by the light of a star, further side and partly in the shadow of the overhanging boughs.

Ruggles stepped forward, and as he drew near, saw to his horror that it was the body of a woman in evening dress, lying on her face, her loosened hair falling about her naked shoulders, from which the light of her gown had been torn away, and as Ruggles stepped forward to ground at her side, turning over her pale and senseless body, his heart seemed to stop with the effect of the pale moonlight was reflected from Ruth's face.

With a choking gasp, he dropped his head, laying his ear upon her head. There was a faint pulsation, and as he lay there, he knew, he was struck again to his core. Her hair was twisted tightly about her neck, and he knew that this was the work of an instant to loosen it, and then, realizing that the girl was really dead, he turned her head, assisted at one of two drowning accidents, lowered her head to the ground, and then, with a sudden wrench, a perfect rhythmic motion of artificial respiration.

As Ruggles was performing this, he saw to his horror that it was the body of a woman in evening dress, lying on her face, her loosened hair falling about her naked shoulders, from which the light of her gown had been torn away, and as Ruggles stepped forward to ground at her side, turning over her pale and senseless body, his heart seemed to stop with the effect of the pale moonlight was reflected from Ruth's face.

no money and nothing to her back, but an evening dress. No doubt she is a tramp. I am presently like an uncapped leopardskin in a cage. She's mad."

Ruggles had listened to the story, and as he did this, his eye was drawn by the light of a star, further side and partly in the shadow of the overhanging boughs.

Burdeett News

From our own Correspondent

If you need a loan on your farm, see George Lomas of Burdeett.

The Forty-Mile Municipality received a large consignment of oats last week, farmers are jubilant and the supply was soon on wagons on the way home.

Thomas Buru has disposed of his large Autman Taylor engine shipping it North this week.

Win. Owens is not improving in health has gone to Hospital at Medicine Hat, we regret to say reports are that he is quite ill and will be some time before he regains his old health and spirits.

Mrs. Wildman who had the flu has also gone to Medicine Hat Hospital she is said to be recovering nicely.

Bill Krause sent his son from Coalville to Burdeett to fit up engine which he intends using on his farm this spring.

W. Andrews who thought he had rented his farm for the season now expects to farm it himself, at present he has the flu but hopes to be out as soon as the weather permits.

General sympathy is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Sandy and family at the loss of their son Delbert a report of whose funeral appears below.

Boy Scout Funeral at Burdeett

Delbert Sandy aged twelve years, second son of J.H. Sandy of this town passed away after a lingering illness on April 10th. He was a well known member of the local Troop of Boy Scouts and this organization at once took charge of the necessary arrangements for the funeral which took place here on Thursday April 16th.

A large rally of scouts were held under the direction of Scout Master Gilbert who also conducted the service. Owing to the large number of friends who intimated their intentions of being present it was found the church would not be spacious enough, so the local theatre was arranged for. Shortly after three o'clock the casket arrived and was恭敬ly carried into the building by six of his old comrades who were in full uniform, some thirty more forming a guard of honor.

The building was packed, every family in the district being represented which was owing not only to the esteem in which the late Scout was held but also as mark of respect and sympathy to the sorrowing parents.

A most impressive service was held the musical number being in the hands of a capable choir arranged by Mrs. Loveland who presided at the instrument; at the conclusion of the Minister's address the casket lid was raised when the deceased was seen for the last time dressed in full uniform of his patrol by large numbers that filled pest.

A move was then made to the cemetery the casket again being borne by old comrades in full uniform, at the grave side the whole troupe took up their position in horse shoe formation and the last Scout honors were given a departed comrade.

A large number of beautiful flowers were placed on the coffin, among the names of those sending we noticed the following but there were many more. Father and Mother Burdeett, Business Men - Mr. and Mrs. McMillan; Mrs. Garberow; The School Children of Burdeett; Mrs. Robinson's children Mr. and Mrs. J. Clarke; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Lomas; Village of Burdeett.

Card of Thanks

Mr. J.H. Sandy and family wish to extend their deep thanks to all their friends, who so kindly assisted with their help and sympathy during the illness and death of their son. Delbert Sandy and also their sorrowing thanks for the beautiful wreaths sent.

Signed: J.H. Sandy and Family.
